I witch Horsewomen.

Different observers have commented upon the increase of women riders in England who ride on the off side of their horses. The English woman has been taken as a model in horsewomanship, and her departure in this respect ly common in Hyde park to have coased to arouse comment, and though it still looks odd "and not thoroughbred, you know," its cause of being is sensible enough to procure sanction for it. According to those who know, riding on one side of her horse where a woman rides almost daily has a tendency to give an undesirable swing or curve to her figure, and the idea of an occasional change is on the same principle as "run ning the other way" around a circle.

CIVIL ENGINEERS.

They Do Not Allow Their Clerks to Keep Private Note-Books.

"He was the best surveyor and draughtsman in my employ," said a well-known civil engineer a few days Nothing makes a more suitable gift than a nice book. Never has there time ago that he was keeping a prinote-book, and after notifying him that he must stop it and again tearning that he was continuing the JOE M. LONDON, practice I was obliged to discharge

I asked the gentleman to explain what he mount by "keeping a private

"A surveyor," said he, "in doing a goes along of the lines he runs, of the various points marking the bounds of the lands he is surveying and all such esta as is not only necessary for the drawing of his plans, but also inci-dentally that which may aid him in the ease of any other survey being

"This data, you see, really con-stitutes a sort of capital or stock to trade, for if the party owning the land ever wishes another survey of it for any purpose he will saturally apply to that same surveyor, who, having these old memoranda, can do the work easier and more cheaply than any other sucveyor. Oftentimes, after many years have elapsed and old landmarks have passed away, those minutes become very valuable.

"Consequently a civil engineer always wishes to keep these in his own hands, and men in his employ are not allowed to make copies of minutes of surveys which they make while in his employ. Otherwise an old employe, in leaving and setting up in business for himself, could carry away a large slice of his employer's business.

SPITTING SERPENTS.

They Are Able to Blind a Man by Pro jecting a Fluid Into His Eyes.

The African explorer, V. Hoehnel, on his voyage to lakes Rudolph and Stephanie, encountered one day, after will certainly have its influence. It is a long rainy spell, rolled up in a con said that already the sight is sufficient- ner of the basket in which the dishes of the expedition were carried, a sec pent of narrow girth and about twen-ty-seven inches long. His servant himself with a long dirk to kill the serpent, but the moment he approached the basket be fell back with a heartrending cry and covered his eyes with his hand. The snake had projected into them a tiny stream of burning liquid which caused terri-ble suffering.

Hochnel came up and placed himself in such a position that the wind would blow the liquid past his eyes should the serpent defend itself in the same manner it had done before. As soon as the snake caught sight of him it lifted its head and squirted two drops of black fluid upon his neck, which, gladiness and of life should ever be si- had heard the cries of the explorer's tervant, came up, and, wrapping his turban around his hand, endeavored to make a dive into the basket for the snake. A moment later he, too, fell to repeat the experiment. He turned "In the kindly memory of her many the basket over on the ground, and admirers she will live as long as they the serpent in its flight was killed so that the se on solved as to the nature of its peculiar squirting qualities.

In public he must always be prepared to show her the attention she needs, but must also be prepared to let her "have a good time," unhampered by his devotion. For instance, he must never let her sit out a dance alone, yet he must never glower when she seems to be dancing often with other men. His manner must be a respect misching of devo-
